

The Hogg Press Magazine

Feature Story: Aliens?

Also: Messaging - Revolutionized

By powerpoint56, revised for Hogg
Press website

Aliens?

On January 26, 2013, a boy named Milo made a fascinating discovery.

It all started when Milo woke up from bed feeling strangely hungry. It felt as if all of the food from his last night's big dinner had been taken away. "Mom!" he shouted. "I'm hungry! Like, starving!"

"Nonsense!" said his mom. "You can't be starving! Don't you remember yesterday's feast? You were stuffed sick."

Milo insisted, "I'm seriously starving! It's like... I've never eaten!"

"If you're playing one of your sneaky jokes, Milo..."

"I'm not."

"Okay, okay. Here's your breakfast," sighed his mom.

Milo, in the letter he wrote Hogg Press about this event, said, "So I sat down at our big table. I ate cornflakes. But then an hour later, again, I didn't feel any food in my stomach. It was weird. What happened? I thought."

Milo continued to eat food but then not feel it an hour later. At lunch he ate 5 tuna sandwiches, because he was so hungry from his food disappearing. He was stuffed. But, an hour later it was gone.

His mom wrote us a letter telling about the story. "What could possibly be wrong with his digestive system for him to completely lose his food? And what's odd is no form of it was visibly leaving his body."

After a doctor's visit (the doctor saw no food anywhere in Milo's body, but no problems with his digestive system), Milo had the idea that maybe there was something wrong with their house and he should try eating food somewhere else.

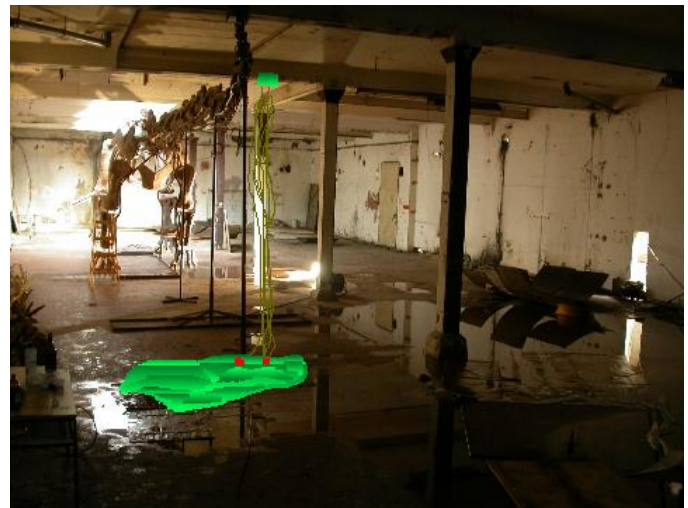

Sure enough, when Milo ate at school the next day, there was no problem. Everything was digested correctly. So what was in the house that was disturbing Milo's digestion?

The mom called a house inspection company to examine the house.

"There is nothing wrong at all with this house itself," said the Inspector. "But I did find something odd. In a pipeline running in the basement, directly under your dining room floor, there are strange green glowing machines. Every hour, these seem to start sucking wildly, grab strange food-like pellets, and throw them down on the basement floor. And every hour, this food seems to be taken by some strange creature, and be eaten."

That explained quite a bit. Something under the dining room was eating everything there. The mom was first to realize this, and directed an experiment with her son.

Milo went to the dining room to eat food. Meanwhile, the mom watched downstairs as the strange green machines in the basement pipes sucked up all of Milo's food (that was in his body). Then she hid, knowing that if the strange creature coming to take the food saw her, she'd be dead meat. And sure enough, she observed a alien/monster come, take the food, and leave through a window.

The mom was horrified. "A monster of great size and green color came, grabbed the food, and snailed back out through an open window."

Thus ends the true story of an alien stealing digested food.

We have secret police forces working to stop this alien action.

If you want to learn more about Milo's cool family, check out the mom's blog at <http://kazamblog.weebly.com/> .

Messaging - Revolutionized

Yes, yes. There's always chat-rooms. Or Gmail's chat. But want super professional, really fast, and fun messaging? That's for FalconMail 5. It's a messaging system made by Hogg Press that does all of the things guaranteed above. So get it now at <http://hoggpess.weebly.com/2/post/2013/02/falconmail.html>.

Here's a screenshot of it:

Business

Hogg Press is open! Hogg Press President Jon is now busy creating apps and games for his website at www.hoggpess.weebly.com. If you're viewing this online, that's because he's just released his new e-book viewer. Learn more about it and the new e-books he's making on the News page.

Thank you for taking a look at this magazine.

We hope you enjoyed it.

A new magazine is released every month.

Sources for Headline Article: <http://kazamblog.weebly.com/>, live conversation with Inspector Halfmann, letter from Mrs. Rosy Kalyer, paper by Milo Kalyer.